

AN AD-LESS NEWSPAPER—ALL THE NEWS IN TABLOID FORM—BIG TYPE—EASY TO READ

THE DAY BOOK

500 SO. PEORIA ST.

398

TEL. MONROE 353

VOL. 2, NO. 82 Chicago, Saturday, Jan. 4, 1913 * ONE CENT

DID MALE PRIVATE DETECTIVE SEARCH TWO GIRLS IN MARSHALL FIELD & CO.'S STORE?

Did He Go Through Their Stockings and Ransack Their Flat? How Were the Girls Induced to Sign Certain Documents?

This is the story of two mysteries.

The first mystery is what happened in the private office of the superintendent of Marshall Field & Co. November 2, 1912.

The second mystery is how nothing has leaked into print about what happened there.

The chief characters in the story are Hazel Krause and Estelle Yaeger, two young girls, Mike McGuire, a private detective, and Ben C. Hinckley, assistant superintendent of Marshall Field & Co.

The chief questions in the mystery are as follows:

Did Mike McGuire, the private detective, personally search the two girls and take money from their stockings?

How did McGuire and Hinckley induce the girls to sign six very extraordinary documents?

What power was used to keep the story from being published?

Hazel Krause, of Tipton, Ind., and Estelle Yaeger were friends. They both came to Chicago to earn their own livings.

Hazel Krause got a job at Marshall Field & Co. Her friend frequently traded there.

On November 2, Estelle Yaeger went to the women's waists section of Marshall Field & Co. and presented a return check for two waists.

The saleswoman noticed something about the check that made it seem not exactly right. She communicated with Ben Hinckley, the assistant superintendent of the store.

Hinckley ordered that Estelle Yaeger should be brought to his office, and this was done.

Mike McGuire, of the McGuire & White Detective Agency, which handles most of the business of the big loop department stores, was in Hinckley's office when the girl arrived.